Listening Is True Dialogue

"If we listen and work, the future is ours," summarized Father John A. Farren, O.P., in his opening address to the freshmen Sept. 14.

Father Farren urged the freshmen to channel their studies to certain areas of study. Among these are foreign languages, the classics, and music. The book, music and lyrics were produced by Anthony Newley and Leslie Bricusse.

The College foresees March Date For New Library Dedication

Monsignor William Barry Library nears completion as workmen begin interior construction. The completion date is set for March.

Father Farren has studied at Providence College, St. Stevens House and the Dominican House of Studies in Washington, D. C. Ordained in 1966, Father is presently studying the differences in Lutheran and Catholic eucharistic worship for his thesis. For this reason he is living in the Lutheran seminary in St. Louis.

Prior to Father Farren's talk, Sister M. Dorothy, president, and the student council officers introduced new students. Father Farren congratulated them and expressed his appreciation to them for their efforts to keep the campus clean and beautiful. He then expressed his appreciation to the student council officers for their help in the opening assembly.

Father Farren concluded his talk by saying that the most important thing in a Christian education is to teach students how to listen and to listen to others. He further said that listening is true dialogue.

ABC Toasts "Special Seasonal"
by Sheila Weatherseed
(Thurs. 8:00 p.m.) starring Sally Field. Sally Field is as energetic, American novice in Paris with a mission. The mission is to make T. V. audiences everywhere expect the unexpected by stiff winds. The male lead in this new A.B.C. series is played by Harry Reay, a popular South American personality. He appears in a scene where Angelicus is going around making signs at Channel 10 press party en route to a visit at his home in Beverly Hills.
The handsome South American reported that "The Flying Man" was being accepted by all church groups. He admitted that Angelicus had received one criticism in particular, however. This criticism comes from the groups that felt that the Mother Superior of the convent was portrayed too strictly. When asked if he thought other networks with no network affiliation may also be worth watching, he said, "To tell you the truth, I don't have time to watch the others."

An Excuse for Thinking

With all the “ins” that are designed to make someone feel as if he’s really “in” — talk-ins, walk-ins, sit-ins, and knowledge explosions for someone to announce what we might consider apropos for the college campus — a “think-in”!

This could hardly be considered original in that colleges and universities have been “think-ins” for some time now. What we propose in this case, is a think-in get-together of students who want to be “in” on what’s going on in the world with some how-comes and where-do-we-go-from-here talk.

Where to start? With a self-imposed reading of daily newspapers, news and opinion magazines, and an interest in TV documentaries and news programs. Add a little casual table talk, too.

After all, this is the Year of Faith — a time for plenty of thinking. This is the year of the national conventions—definitely a time for plenty of thinking.

NSA Emphasizes Domestic Image

College Park, Md. — The National Student Association will build a new image this year as the organization begins emphasizing domestic problems rather than international affairs.

In its new policy campaign, the NSA hopes to regain the respect it lost in February with its financial links with the Central Intelligence Agency.

The actions this year of the NSA will concentrate on educational reform activities, such as course and teacher evaluation projects, tutorial programs, and “student stress” seminars, in which students and administrators discuss college life on an equal basis.

The NSA will also concentrate on the draft, black power, and student power.
